CANDIDATES OUT ON OPENING DAY

First Opportunity for Office Seekers to Secure Signers Sees them Lifting Petitions and Interviewing their Friends.

Busy times were experienced at the county commissioners' office today the first that, under the new law, it was legal for candidates at the September primaries to secure signers for petitions to have their names placed on the ballots. Many of the candidates appeared to take out their necessary papers and they, at once, started out to get the signatures.

Some of those who live outside of Gettysburg got their papers earlier in the week and this morning were quickly at work visiting their friends. Some haste is necessary in view of the fact that no one can sign two petitions for the same office or the petitions of the same man for more than one office, and it was the early visitor who had the least trouble getting the signatures.

Those taking out their blanks this morning were principally the candidates for county offices. A long list of these appears and there will be no dearth of candidates from which the voter may take his choice in the fall. The men aspiring to the town and township offices will number into the hundreds but there was little hurry to secure these petitions, as not so many signers are required and there is not likely to be such a rush for the various positions.

During the next week, however, the commissioners and their clerk expect to have their hands full taking care of the applicants and the supply of blanks will fall rapidly as the office aspirants make their requests.

VIEWING MONUMENTS

Pennsylvania Commission here for a Visit of Several Days.

General H. S. Huidekoper, of Philadelphia, and E. L. Whittelsey, of Erie, are here today for a meeting of the Pennsylvania Gettysburg Monuments Commission on Saturday. The other members will arrive this evening. The meeting is principally for the purpose of inspecting the three statues erected this spring. The members of the commission will also inspect the Pennsylvania monument and direct whatever work is necessary about it. They are registered at the Eagle.

Other visitors here include Prof. Hall, of Lehigh University; Prof. Peck and Prof. Davison, of Lafayette; and Prof. Schildt, of Franklin and Marshall, who made up a party for a motor tour through this section.

MEDAL CONTEST

Pines Church Scene of Temperance
Entertainment on Thursday.

Six young ladies from Sunday Schools, of Gettysburg and vicinity, took part in a silver medal contest at Pines Lutheran church, near New Chester, Thursday evening. Miss Frances Wible, who represented Pittsburg, won the first prize, and Miss Marian Stallsmith, who represented St. James, won second prize. The choir of Pines Church rendered special music. The judges were Miss Ella Yeagy, Miss Gail Bell, and Miss Susanna Flemming. William Eden and John Oyler furnished automobiles to take the party to New Chester.

BOHEMIANS HERE TO HARVEST CROPS

Fifty Two Acres of Beans on Farms
Near Littlestown to be Picked by Forty Foreigners who are Given Special Quarters.

The population of Germany township has been increased by forty men, some with families. They are Bohemians and have been brought here from Baltimore by B. F. Shriver and Company, extensive canners of vegetables.

These people are here for the purpose of picking the beans grown on the B. F. Shriver farms—the Littlestown farm of 32 acres, and the Brown farm of 25 acres. In addition to these 57 acres a number of farmers have planted beans, making a total crop of the 110 acres which the canning company will handle.

The Shriver Company has erected a large and comfortable "bunk house" in a grove on their Littlestown farm to accommodate these people. It is a two-story structure, 80 x 18 feet, of planed lumber. The upper rooms are for the men, the bunks ranging along the side. The lower room is divided into compartments for the women and children.

Two porches, eight feet wide, extend the entire length of the building on the north and south sides. On these porches are the dining tables, each one seating from four to eight persons. The cooking is done in the building. A well has been drilled near the door.

The prospects for a large bean crop are not good, hence only forty men have been brought here instead of the seventy-five originally planned for.

MUST BE OBSERVED

No Violations of Burgess' Orders will be Tolerated.

Burgess Eicholtz will have four policemen on duty Saturday to see that his orders regarding the use of fireworks and blank cartridges are strictly carried out. No fireworks of any kind may be set off in Gettysburg before Monday, though the stores will be allowed to sell them on Saturday. Parents will be held accountable should their children use any of their purchases before Monday. An effort was made to have the Burgess allow the use of fireworks after the celebration Saturday evening, but the town is likely to be crowded with people and he deemed it best for the general safety to adhere to his original orders, and it is hoped that citizens generally will co-operate in their enforcement.

BOLDLY ROBBED RAILROAD STATION

Thousand Dollars Worth of Goods
Removed from Trunks at Western Maryland Office on the Mountain.
Thieves Escape.

The station house of the Western Maryland railroad at Blue Ridge Summit was broken into early Thursday morning and five trunks and two suitcases were opened and their contents abstracted, while two other trunks were opened and rummaged and their contents scattered all over the floor. One of the trunks was found along the railroad and one is missing.

The value of the contents of the trunks rifled was not short of $1000. They contained bed linens, table linens of the finest quality, blankets, valuable wearing apparel, dresses, hosiery, jewelry, haberdashery, etc.

The robbery was discovered early in the morning and much excitement was occasioned all over the Summit region. Telegrams and phone messages were sent in every direction.

The detectives of the railroad company were early put in touch with the situation and arrived betimes. They are working on the job, but as yet no worth while clues have been brought to the surface.

The parties were evidently adepts and not only knew just about what the loot would be but how to get away with it. No tracks were left and the trunk found was the only mute evidence of the flight. This furnished only a clue to the direction they probably took immediately from the station. There are many roads that radiate out from that point, and just which one the robbers took is the conundrum the detectives are now trying to solve.

It was the boldest piece of burglary and theft that has ever occurred on the mountain.

A number of ladies, who had just arrived from the city to occupy their cottages, are bereft not only of their linens and bedclothing but their wardrobes and personal finery.

GETS ANOTHER DISTRICT

Local Revenue Territory Changed and Headquarters Moved.

Joseph S. Felix, local deputy internal revenue collector, has received notice that his district is changed to Adams, Franklin, Cumberland and Fulton counties, and his headquarters designated at Chambersburg. The old construction of his territory included York and Adams counties. The change becomes effective at once and Mr. Felix may remove his family to Chambersburg later.

FOR ROAD WORK

Much Needed Bridge will be Placed on Bonneauville Road.

State highway work authorized in this county for the near future includes the construction of a bridge over Cross Run on the Bonneauville Road about three miles east of town and attention to the Taneytown road. J. A. Bolen, of York Springs, has been appointed to oversee the work on the Menallen road from Heidlersburg to Biglerville.

TROUBLE IN HANOVER CAMP

Fans and Players in Argument over
Release of Popular Catcher. New Member Object of Unpleasant
Treatment at Game.

There is trouble, and not a little of it, in the ranks of Hanover's players and fans, the latest development to cause dissatisfaction being the releasing of Steinbach, their catcher who played during the early part of the season only to be let go this week and signed by Chambersburg. Stroth, late manager of the Maroons, has supplanted Steinbach at Hanover.

It seems that Steinbach was declared "too young and inexperienced" by Manager Starr. On Thursday afternoon, during the game with Chambersburg, Stroth was roasted from start to finish by displeased fans. One of the Hanover papers has taken up the fight and sides with the fans in their displeasure over the release of Steinbach, though claiming any demonstration against Stroth to be unfair.

To complicate matters, it is said that both Crawford and Makert, two of Hanover's best men, threatened to quit the game after Steinbach left. The catcher was a general favorite, it is said, and the other players did not sanction the change. Word from Hanover this morning was to the effect that Crawford was sure to stay and that Makert likely would do the same. Both would have little trouble getting jobs elsewhere in the Blue Ridge League if they were given "their releases."

Meanwhile, all is peaceful in the Gettysburg camp. The four games at home this week were enough to satisfy the fans that the Patriots can and will play an article of ball that will please the most exacting and the record for the remainder of the season should be one of which the town can be proud.

Miller, left fielder, returned to Lewisburg to-day and it is doubtful if he will again appear in the line-up. He proved a good fielder but his much vaunted prowess at the bat failed to develop. His college record was remarkable but the league stuff was a bit too fast for him. Weimer will likely be in shape to play against Hanover next Tuesday, and Plan's will be used in the outfield if necessary. The team left this morning for Harerstown, taking along Greenwell and Burns as the probable pitchers for the two games while Howard and Herril will be on hand if needed. McAttee will umpire.

BIGLERVILLE

Biglerville—Mrs. D. L. Plank, of Gettysburg, has been spending some time with her daughter, Mrs. Howard Spangler, who was ill.

Mrs. Gilliland and children returned on Tuesday from a visit to Carlisle.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Wilson returned on Tuesday from spending a few days in Millville, Columbia county.

THE ARMENIAN TRIED TO ESCAPE

Liner Was Fired on When Captain Refused to Stop.

WAS IN BRITISH SERVICE

Reports of American Lives Lost Vary From 11 to 21—Government Awaits Details.

Washington, July 2.—The Leyland line steamship Armenian, built and owned in Great Britain, was "engaged on admiralty business" when she was sunk by a German submarine off the Cornwall coast of England two days ago, with the loss of a score of American lives.

Ambassador Page, at London, reported to the state department that he had received this information from British admiralty officials.

Secretary Lansing announced that until more complete reports have been received the United States will take no action. Dispatches from Avonmouth detailing how the Armenian tried to escape after being ordered to stop, caused officials to believe that the sinking of the vessel was accomplished in accordance with international law, and that the United States might have no reason to take up the subject with Germany, except to verify the details of the Armenian's reported resistance.

Under the rules of international law, it was pointed out that the Armenian, which flew the British flag, as well as any neutral vessel, could be sunk for refusing to obey a warning to halt and submit to visit and search or capture.

Americans on board such a ship lose the protection of their government when the vessel offers resistance.

Consul Armstrong, at Bristol, who sent the first word of the destruction of the Armenian, reported to Ambassador Page that twenty-one of the twenty-nine men lost with the Armenian were Americans. (A dispatch from England mentions only eleven Americans among the lost.)

Armenian Tried to Escape.

Avonmouth, Eng., July 2.—There were eleven Americans among the nineteen members of the crew who lost their lives in the sinking of the Leyland line freight steamship Armenian by the German submarine U-38 off Trevose Head, Cornwall, on Monday.

Some of the members of the crew of the Armenian were killed outright when the German torpedo struck the ship.

When she was sunk the Armenian was carrying a cargo of 1422 mules from Newport News, Va., to Avonmouth, the animals to be used by the French armies in Belgium and France. The vessel had a crew of seventy-two men and carried ninety-six men as mule tenders.

The submarine was first sighted by a man at the wheel, and though the ship was pushed to the limit the mosquito craft rapidly overhauled her and began shelling. The Armenian's efforts to keep her stern to the submarine were futile.

The faster vessel circled the big freighter, and the German commander, speaking through a megaphone, ordered the Armenian's captain to surrender or he would sink the ship. The skipper of the Leyland liner tried to evade the undersea boat, but the submarine dropped a shell through a skylight into the Armenian's engine room, putting the engines out of action. The Armenian then surrendered.

Lifeboats were lowered, and the crew and some seventy mule tenders, nearly all Americans, scrambled into them. As one of the boats was being lowered a shell from the submarine cut the falls of the boat. The occupants were spilled into the water, and supposedly were drowned.

Five boats loaded with survivors got away. The submarine then fired two torpedoes into the Armenian, and the vessel sank within thirty minutes. The survivors rowed around in the boats until Tuesday morning, when a steam trawler landed them at Avonmouth.

Say German Crown Prince Is Dead.

London, July 2.—There is a persistent report current here that the German crown prince is dead. Substance is added to this report, unauthoritative as it is, by the fact that the crown prince has not been mentioned in dispatches for some weeks, though at the outset of the war he was the subject of almost daily messages.

Asia Minor Port Destroyed.

Athens, July 2.—The coast of Asia Minor is being vigorously bombarded by gunboats and cruisers detached from the Anglo-French fleet at the Dardanelles. Many sailing ships have been sunk. The port of Budrum has been destroyed.

Turks Kill German Attaché.

London, July 2.—A Copenhagen dispatch says that Colonel Leipzig, military attaché of the German embassy at Constantinople, is reported to have been murdered by the Turkish political group that opposed Turkey's entrance into the war.

GERMANS STOPPED IN ARGONNE FIGHT

French Repulse Desperate Offensive of Foe.

Paris, July 2.—The German aggressive in the Argonne region, whose partial success was admitted, has been checked, according to the official war office communication.

The German success was gained near Bagatelle, where the last of the violent attacks gave the Germans a foothold among the French positions. The Germans employed 24,000 men in their attack in this region.

The French war office report says: "Wednesday night passed quietly in the north in the vicinity of Arras, and as far as Champagne. The German attack in the Argonne, reported Wednesday, was particularly violent. It is estimated that the forces engaged amounted to two divisions (24,000 men). This attack, however, was entirely checked. Furthermore, two fresh movements against our trenches at the east of the Benarville road were repulsed."

"Another violent attack delivered by the Germans in the vicinity of Metzler has been completely checked. The Germans suffered important losses."

BECKER GETS REPRIEVE

Governor Whitman Postpones Execution to July 26.

Albany, N. Y., July 2.—Governor Whitman granted Charles Becker, the former New York police lieutenant, under a sentence of death, a reprieve until July 26.

He took this action after refusing to commute the sentence or appoint a commission to inquire into the case. The governor said that he would take no further action in the case than the granting of the reprieve. This means that if the United States supreme court does not interfere Becker will have to die.

Martin M. Manton, Becker's attorney, said, following the announcement of the reprieve: "I have little doubt that the case will go to the supreme court of the United States."

Becker had been sentenced to die in the week beginning July 12.

FRANCE USES NO U. S. SHELLS

War Ministry Denies Artillery Has Employed American Ammunition.

Paris, July 2.—With reference to an interview published in the United States in which Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria was quoted as saying that 50 per cent of the shells used by the French were manufactured in the United States, the ministry of war made the following official statement: "Neither now nor at any time since the beginning of the war, has the French artillery made use of any shells whatsoever manufactured in the United States."

Delaware Ex-Treasurer Hurt by Auto.

Laurel, Del., July 2.—Ex-State Treasurer Charles A. Hastings, a prominent business man and politician, was run over by an automobile driven by Jennings Quillen, of Bethel, here and dragged twenty yards. Mr. Hastings' presence of mind in holding on to the front axle saved his life. His condition is critical.

British Losses at Straits 38,636.

London, July 2.—British losses at the Dardanelles up to May 31, among the land and sea forces numbered 38,636. Premier Asquith made this announcement in the house of commons. The killed were 495 officers and 6927 men.

Women Lose in Wisconsin.

Madison, Wis., July 2.—Woman suffrage failed conclusively for the present legislative session. The state senate, by a vote of 14 to 17, refused to reconsider its vote in killing the Grell resolution.

TEUTONS CAPTURE 140,000 IN GALICIA

Also Take 80 Cannon and 263 Machine Guns.

GERMANS PRESS FORWARD

Mackensen's Troops Advance Against the Russians Despite Desperate Resistance.

Berlin, July 2.—The German army headquarters issued the following statement:

"In the southeastern theater of war, the Germans and Austrians have captured 409 Russian officers, 140,650 men, 80 cannon and 263 machine guns since the last of May."

"Between the Bug and Vistula rivers, on both sides of Kamenna, the army of General von Mackensen is pressing forward in pursuit of the Russians."

"General von Linsingen's Austro-German army has stormed the Russian positions on the Gnula Lipa river, north of Rohatyn. Three Russian officers, 2328 men and five machine guns were taken there."

"In the western theater of war (Poland and the Baltic provinces) the Germans during June took 25,000 prisoners, including 121 officers, seven cannon, six mine throwers, fifty-two machine guns, one aeroplane and great quantities of ammunition."

Teuton Allies Sweep On.

London, July 2.—The Austro-German steam roller continues to crush Russian opposition in the southeastern section of the battle front, according to dispatches from Petrograd, Berlin and Vienna.

On the eastern front every change leaves Warsaw, the capital of Russian Poland, more open to the drive which the Germans and Austro-Hungarians evidently are making toward that city.

So steadily have the Teuton forces progressed on all these fronts that there are indications that a wedge is being driven through the Russian right wing, isolating that section from the main armies of Grand Duke Nicholas falling back from Lemberg.

The wedge appears to be going through by way of Rawa Ruska and the Russian right is being turned and driven north into Poland through the forests to the north of the Tanew river.

Except that such a movement successfully driven home would break the continuity preserved by the grand duke along the entire front in this section, no immediate danger to the former is feared.

The Russian right can retire toward Warsaw, where it will effect a junction with the defensive lines which have been holding positions in the Pilica river section for months.

Although falling back, the army of General Ivanoff is putting up a stiff resistance in the Gnula Lipa river section and is directed upon Tarnopol, which is the last of the larger towns of Galicia in Russian hands. This is to be the next position attacked by the Teutons and it is doubtful if the Russians will try to hold it.

They are simply retreating, destroying all railroads, bridges and roads as they go, and every forward step taken by the Teutons is drawing them further and further from their bases, the sources of supply for their big guns, which have made them successful in this campaign.

NURSE FATALLY BURNED

Can of Polish Explodes While She Is Cleaning Stove.

Pottsville, Pa., July 2.—Catherine Boland, a nurse, was fatally burned when a can of silver polish exploded at the home of John Nelson, a lumber merchant.

Miss Mary Coyle, of Philadelphia, a cook, was seriously burned. The Nelson residence was damaged by the fire following the explosion.

The two women were cleaning a lighted gas stove with the polish, when the burning gas reached the preparation.

Miss Boland was instantly enveloped in the fire, and all aflame, she ran into the street and rolled over and over in an attempt to put out the fire. Rugs were wrapped around her and the fire beaten out.

To Probe Deaths in Asylum.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 2.—State and county authorities started investigations into conditions attending the death of Jacob Milsen, an inmate of the state hospital here, who was killed by a violently insane patient, and Alexander H. Dougherty, who died several days ago, and whose body is said to bear bruises. It is expected an inquiry will also be made into the death several weeks ago of John McCoy. It is said that McCoy died from an attack by another patient, who had eluded the guards.

Dying Man Attempts Suicide.

Mount Holly, N. J., July 2.—Clifford Danley died at his home here from tuberculosis. He attempted suicide earlier in the day by striking himself on the head with a mallet. He was so weak that the blows were ineffective.

Hardly to Be Expected.

GERMAN REPLY IS SENT TO KAISER

Has Answer to U. S. Note For Final Decision.

Berlin, July 2.—As the result of this week's conferences on drafts of the German reply to the American note, it is now in the hands of Emperor William at army headquarters.

The emperor's decision is expected in time for the note to be presented to James W. Gerard, the American ambassador, probably on July 5 or 6.

High officials are endeavoring to bring about a friendly settlement of the questions with America, and there is every reason to believe that they are anxious to make the proposals as conciliatory and acceptable as possible.

These officials, however, have to reckon with the force of strong public opinion, which undoubtedly will oppose anything favoring of complete acquiescence in the American proposals. This public opinion is being skillfully exploited by those who are opposed to all concessions.

Friends of a settlement are working under these circumstances with considerable difficulty, and the note probably will represent a compromise not in accordance with their desires.

WROTE THREAT TO WILSON

Austrian Said He Would Commit "Political Crime" If Not Given $300.

New York, July 2.—The federal grand jury indicted Rudolph Malik, an Austrian salesman, charging that in a letter mailed June 23 to President Wilson he threatened the president with a "political crime" should the president refuse to pay him $300.

The money, it was charged, was demanded as an indemnity for Malik's inability to return to his family in Austria.

After his indictment, Malik was arraigned, pleaded not guilty and was locked up again in default of $3000 bail. Harold A. Content, the assistant district attorney, detailed to the case, said that he regarded the latter in a much more serious light than the usual expression of a harmless crank or mentally disordered person. The crime contemplated by the writer, Mr. Content said, he had reason to believe, was more than a political offense.

Famous Buffalo to Die.

New York, July 2.—Black Diamond, the famous bison of the Central Park Zoological Garden, whose image now adorns one side of the nickel, will be slain within a few days, but his massive head will be preserved and mounted. The animal has been the model for many sculptors and painters. Despite his fame there were no bidders when he was put up at auction, but the big bison was finally sold to a dealer in poultry and game for about $700.

ANOTHER TEN INNING DRAW

Gettysburg and Martinsburg Produce Second Pitchers' Battle in Two Days and Batting Average Drop as a Result. One Run Each.

Two ten inning thrillers in one week are almost too much for Gettysburg fans, but the second of the pair was furnished on Nixon Field Thursday afternoon when Martinsburg and Gettysburg played to a tie at one run. And in passing it might be mentioned that base ball lovers would have to travel long and far to see much better games than those of the past three evenings.

Stair was in the box for Gettysburg and Clark for Martinsburg. Each allowed four hits and each struck out eight. Both of the runs scored were earned, and good stops, fast fielding and clever base running marked the game from start to finish.

Gettysburg got her tally in the first when Bigler opened with a clean single and Dove bunted over the infield. Mahaffie fouled out and Bigler scored on Jarosick's rattling single. Dove going to third and Jarosick to second on the throw in. It looked like a merry-go-round but Kane popped a little one and Miller was an easy out.

In the fourth Kane registered a hit but was doubled at second on a foul. In the sixth Mahaffie drew a pass but was caught trying to steal second and it was not until the eighth inning that more than three batters faced Clark again. Then Sutton drew a pass after one was out. Oylar sacrificed him to second, but Bigler was the third out on a line drive. Dove was safe at first in the ninth or Thompson's error but was soon caught stealing. In the tenth Kane drew a pass but his team-mates could not score him.

So much for Gettysburg. The visitors were put out in one, two, three order in all the first six innings except the third when Clark hit safely. Martinsburg was dangerous in the seventh. Donnelly put a hot one through Stair that Dove fumbled. He stole second and Rawlings was safe on Oylar's error. Donnelly taking third only to be caught at the plate by Bigler's fast throw to Mahaffie. Morris was safe at first on the play but Thompson fled out to Kane.

The visitors' run came in the eighth. Zachary got a hit, was sacrificed to second by Hayes and scored on Durboraw's hit. Shipley was passed. Donnelly hit a mean one that Jerry booted but Dove got it in time to throw Durboraw out at home. In the ninth and tenth Martinsburg had a man on base but Stair's pitching and some fast fielding prevented a score. The entire team played excellent ball and the game left no "bad taste."

WANTED BETTER BANK ADVERTISING

Advertising Manager of Bankers Trust Co. of New York Makes a Remarkable Analysis of Financial Sale Possibilities

Banks and Trust Companies are beginning to see that advertising can be made a distinct business builder.

Edwin Bird Wilson, Manager of the Advertising Department of the Bankers' Trust Company, New York, has prepared for THE DAILY NEWSPAPER this interesting article on the financial advertising question.

By Edwin Bird Wilson

We reprint below an article from "The Daily Newspaper", the official paper of the advertising convention held in Chicago during the past week, with the idea that it may be of some benefit to our local bankers. It is a well known fact that Gettysburg is practically the only town in this section of the state in which one or more banks do not use advertising to promote their business.

Interest in bank and trust company advertising seems to be increasing among the bankers who rule the destinies of this country's great financial institutions. There is a marked tendency to advertise banking services in the same way in which other services or commodities have been advertised, a tendency to get away from the fallacy that is to keep the institution's name before the public.

After groping their way through the hazy mazes of convention and banking ethics, bankers now realize that banking is more a business than a profession and that business methods must be applied to it in all phases and departments—in its advertising as well as in its bookkeeping. As a result of this changed feeling, we are beginning to see real advertising copy put out by banking institutions, and the tribe of bank cards, written in a form of which nobody could be expected to read, is gradually diminishing in number, and let us hope will finally become extinct.

Seeing the Light

In other words, bankers, like other business men, are coming to realize that advertising, if it is worth doing at all, is worth doing intelligently, and that care and study must be exercised in planning and writing the advertisements. What is said in an advertisement and how it is said is just as important as that the banking institution should advertise at all.

Bankers are also getting away from the rather irrational idea that they can plan and write their own advertisements. They are learning that advertising is an art and must be studied carefully if the best results are to be obtained, and they are more and more calling in specialists just as they have long been accustomed to do in other fields, as law, expert accounting, etc.

But while financial advertising has appreciably improved during the past few years, it is the belief of some who have studied the subject—and I hold with them—that the best bank and trust company advertising is yet to be done, and that it will be done in the way of community or group endeavor. It is my firm conviction that the banking institutions of almost any city in this country could with advantage get together in a campaign for the common good of those institutions and of the community of which they are a part.

It seems a clear case when one considers the subject thoughtfully. In any city of the United States where normal conditions obtain, we find a number of commercial banks, a number of savings banks and a number of trust companies. Within those separate groups, at any rate, the services of all institutions are very similar. All commercial banks do approximately the same kind of business; all savings banks serve practically the same end; all trust companies perform essentially the same function. Moreover, there are functions which all three have in common, so the interests of the banking institutions in a given community are very largely the same.

Proposed Campaign

Then why not stand together and in a well planned, prolonged campaign of publicity, endeavor to inform and educate the masses to the aims, functions and practical services of the banks and trust companies?

It is quite obvious that community advertising for banks can be most effectively done through the medium of the local newspapers. Of course, the national magazines might be used to foster a general sentiment for the banks and trust companies, but their effect is too scattering to bring about promptly the desired results. Let the banks of any city subscribe to an adequate appropriation and place the management of a complete campaign in the hands of a competent advertising man, who should work in co-operation with a representative committee of bankers. Let space be arranged for once or twice a week in representative newspapers for a long period—at least one year, and possibly two years—and let the announcements be plainly paid-for advertisements, not advertisements published in the guise of news.

Permit me to remark parenthetically that I consider it a mistaken policy which has induced some interests to attempt to carry on their propaganda through the news columns of newspapers. It would seem that the time is past when the public can be favorably influenced by such efforts. The public has more respect for the obviously bought-and-paid-for advertisement issued in an honest, open manner, and with the identity of its publisher clearly revealed.

The community newspaper advertising should, of course, be supplemented by pamphlets, describing in simple language the economic purposes of banking institutions, the practical effects they have on the prosperity of the community and the services they can render to the individuals of a community. Separate pamphlets would be needed for each class of institutions, very likely, but the best effect from such a campaign would probably be obtained by using the same booklets for all banks within the same class.

The efficient carrying out of a well ordered plan of community advertising by the banking institutions of any town or city should accomplish the following results:

What Could Be Done

First—Create a greater respect for and confidence in banking institutions on the part of the public. It would seem that such senseless runs as we have witnessed in New York City on mutual savings banks could not have happened if the people had understood how thoroughly safe and sound such institutions are under the laws of New York State.

Second—Educate the public to the economic usefulness of banking institutions. Too many people look upon a bank as merely "a place to put your money," losing sight entirely of the important part which the bank plays in maintaining the prosperity of the business community.

Third—Increase the stream of small contributions of capital into channels of legitimate business, and diminish the stream which flows into the illegitimate channels where the money is finally lost in the "slough of despond." The people ought to be taught that banks of deposit are like reservoirs which collect capital from many small sources for use when and where most needed for carrying on the business life of the community.

Fourth—Educate the people to a higher standard of thrift, and thus actually increase the working capital of the community. America has a long way to go before it can approach the record of France, for instance, for widespread thrift, and consequent widespread ability to invest in high-class securities.

Fifth—Stabilize the finances of any given community, and if carried on by many towns and cities throughout the country, exercise a stabilizing influence on the finances of the nation and in turn on the finances of the world.

Sixth—Increase the effectiveness of the individual advertising and other new business efforts of all the participating banks. It is well recognized law of advertising that the more the more there will be for all advertisers in the same line. We have it on good authority that the first year's advertising of American Bankers' Association ("A. B. A.") Travelers' Cheques resulted in a large increase of sales of other kinds of travelers' cheques, as well as of those advertised.

Apt Comparison.

George is fond of Mother Goose rhymes. His favorite is "Old Mother Hubbard." One day he begged his mother for candy. She thought he should not have it and refused. He looked at her an instant, then turning away with a sigh said: "And so the poor dog had none."

He Fixed It All Right.

"Bud Benwick!" she exclaimed. "Aren't you ashamed of yourself to eat all that banana without offering at least part of it to the little girl?" Bud looked a bit uncomfortable, but after a moment's hesitation he answered: "It's all right, grandma: I said 'em."

Something of a "Snap."

Joseph had just started to kindergarten and therefore was required to go only half a day. The little boy next door saw him home one afternoon and said: "Don't you go to school any more, Joe?" "Oh, yes," Joseph replied, "but I only have to go in the morning. Ain't I got it simple?"

Dark Hollow

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—A curious crowd of neighbors invade the mysterious home of Judge Ostrander, county judge and eccentric recluse, following a veiled woman who has gained entrance through the gates of the high double barriers surrounding the place. The woman has disappeared but the judge is found in a cataleptic state. Bela, his servant, appears in a dying condition and prevents entrance to a secret door. Bela dies. The judge awakes.

CHAPTER II—Miss Weeks explains to the judge what has occurred during his seizure. He secretly discovers the whereabouts of the veiled woman.

CHAPTER III—The veiled woman proves to be the widow of a man tried before the judge and executed for murder years before. Her daughter is engaged to the judge's son, from whom he is estranged, but the murder is between the lovers. The widow plans to clear her husband's memory and asks the judge's aid.

CHAPTER IV—Alone in her room Deborah Scoville reads the newspaper clipping telling the story of the murder of Algernon Etheridge by John Scoville in Dark Hollow, twelve years before.

CHAPTER V—The judge and Mrs. Scoville meet at Spencer's folly and she shows him how, on the day of the murder, she saw the shadow of a man, whittling a stick and wearing a long peaked cap, like her husband's. Until long afterward she did not know that her husband had not worn that cap on the fatal day. The judge engages her and her daughter Reuther to live with him in his mysterious home.

CHAPTER VI—Deborah and her lawyer, Black, go to the police station and see the stick used to murder Etheridge. She discovers a broken knife, the point embedded in it. Deborah and Reuther go to live with the judge.

CHAPTER VII—While cleaning the judge's study under his eye, Deborah sees a portrait of Oliver, the judge's son, with a black band painted across the eyes. That night she finds, in Oliver's room, a cap with a peak like the shadowed one, and a knife with a broken blade-point.

CHAPTER X.

Anonymous Letters.

Deborah re-entered the judge's house a stricken woman. She reached her room door and was about to enter, when at a sudden thought she paused and let her eyes wander down the hall till they settled on another door, the one she had closed behind her the night before, with the deep resolve never to open it again except under compulsion. A few minutes later she was standing in one of the dim corners of Oliver's musty room, reopening a book which she had taken down from the shelves on her former visit. She remembered it from its torn back and the fact that it was an algebra. Turning to the fly leaf, she looked again at the names and schoolboy phrases she had seen scribbled all over its surface, for the one which she remembered as, "I hate algebra."

It had not been a very clearly written "algebra," and she would never have given this interpretation to the scrawl, had she been in a better mood. Now another thought had come to her, and she wanted to see the word again. Was she glad or sorry to have yielded to this impulse, when by a closer inspection she perceived that the word was not "algebra" at all, but "Algernon." I hate Algernon E.—I hate A. E.—I hate Algernon E., all over the page, and here and there on other pages, sometimes in characters so rubbed and faint as to be almost unreadable and again so pressed into the paper by a vicious pencil point as to have broken their way through to the leaf underneath.

The work of an ill-conditioned schoolboy! but—this hate dated back many years. Paler than ever, and with hands trembling almost to the point of incapacity, she put the book back and flew to her own room, the prey of thoughts bitter almost to madness.

It was the second time in her life that she had been called upon to go through this precise torture. Then, only her own happiness and honor were involved; now it was Reuther's; and the fortune which sustained her through the ignominy of her own trouble failed her at the prospect of Reuther's. And again, the two cases were not equal. Her husband had had traits which, in a manner, had prepared her for the ready suspicion of people. But Oliver was a man of reputation and kindly heart; and yet, in the course of time this had come, and the question once agitating her as to whether Reuther was a fit mate for him and now evolved itself into this: Was he a fit mate for her?

She had rather have died, nay, have had Reuther die, than to find herself forced to weigh and decide so momentous a question.

For, however she might feel about it, not a single illusion remained as to whose hand had made use of John Scoville's stick to strike down Algernon Etheridge. How could she have when she came to piece the whole story together, and weigh the facts she had accumulated against Oliver with those which had proved so fatal to her husband?

Deborah shuddered. Aye, the mystery had cleared, but only to enshroud her spirits anew and make her long with all her bursting heart and shuddering soul that death had been her portion before ever she had essayed to lift the veil held down so tightly by these two remorseful men. But was her fault irremediable? The only unanswerable connection between this old crime and Oliver lay in the evidence she had herself collected. As she had every intention of suppressing this evidence, and as she had small dread of any one else digging out the facts to which she only possessed a clue, might she not hope that any suspicions raised by her inquiries would fall like a house of cards when she withdrew her hand from the toppling structure?

She would make her first effort and see. Mr. Black had heard her complaint; he should be the first to learn that the encouragement she had received was so small that she had decided to accept her present good luck without further query, and not hark back to a past which most people had buried.

"You began it, as women begin most things, without thought and a due weighing of consequences. And now you propose to drop it in the same freakish manner. Isn't that it?"

Deborah Scoville lifted her eyes in manifest distress and fixed them deprecatingly upon her interrogator. Mr. Black smiled. The woman delighted him. The admiration which he had hitherto felt for her person and for the character which could so develop through misery and reproach as to make her in twelve short years the exponent of all that was most attractive and bewitching in woman seemed likely to extend to her mind.

"I am reconciled simply from necessity," was her gentle response. "Nothing is more precious to me than Reuther's happiness. I should but endanger it further by raising false hopes. That is why I have come to cry halt."

"Madam, I commend your decision. But why should you characterize your hopes as false, just when there seems to be some justification for them?"

Her eyes widened, and she regarded him with a simulation of surprise, which interested without imposing upon him.

"I do not understand you," said she. "Have you come upon some clue? Have you heard something which I have not?"

Mr. Black took two or three crushed and folded papers from a drawer beside him and, holding them, none too plainly in sight, remarked very quietly, but with legal firmness:

"Do not let us play about the bush any longer. You have announced your intention of making no further attempt to discover the man who in your eyes merited the doom accorded to John Scoville. Your only reason for this—if you are the woman I think you are—is your fear of giving further opportunity to the misguided rancor of an irresponsible writer of anonymous epistles. Am I not right, madam?"

Beaten, beaten by a direct assault, because she possessed the weaknesses, as well as the pluck, of a woman. She could control the language of her lips, but not their quivering; she could meet his eye with steady assurance, but she could not keep the pallor from her cheeks or subdue the evidences of her heart's turmoil. Her pitiful glance acknowledged her defeat, which she already saw mirrored in his eyes.

Taking it for an answer, he said gently enough:

"That we may understand each other at once, I will mention the person who has been made the subject of these attacks. He—"

"Don't speak the name," she prayed, leaning forward and laying her gloved hand upon his sleeve. "It is not necessary. The whole thing is an outrage."

His admiration was quite evident. It did not prevent him, however, from saying quite abruptly:

"Men who indulge themselves in writing anonymous accusations seldom limit themselves to one effusion. I will stake my word that the judge has found more than one on his lawn."

She could not have responded if she would; her mouth was dry, her tongue half paralyzed. What was coming?

The glint in the lawyer's eye warned her that something scarcely in consonance with her hopes and wishes might be expected.

"The judge has seen and read these barefaced insinuations against his son and has not turned this whole town topsy-turvy! A lion does not stop to meditate; he springs. And Archibald Ostrander has the nature of a lion. Mrs. Scoville, this is a very serious matter. I do not wonder that you are a trifle overwhelmed by the results of your ill-considered investigations."

"Does the town know? Has the thing become a scandal—a byword? Miss Weeks gave no proof of ever having heard one word of this dreadful business."

"That is good news. You relieve me. Perhaps it is not a general topic as yet." Then shortly and with lawyerlike directness:

"Look over these. Do they look at all familiar?"

She glanced down at the crumpled sheets and half-sheets he had spread out before her. They were similar in appearance to the one she had picked up on the judge's grounds, but the language was more forcible, as witness these:

When a man is trusted to defend another on trial for his life, he's supposed to know his business. How came John Scoville to hang, without a thought, being given to the man who hated A. Etheridge like poison? I could name a certain chap who more than once in the old days boasted that he'd like to kill the fellow. And it wasn't Scoville or any one of his low-down stamp either.

A high and mighty name shouldn't shield a man who sent a poor, unfriended wretch to his death in order to save his own bacon.

"Horrible!" murmured Deborah, drawing back in terror of her own emotion. "It's the work of some implacable enemy taking advantage of the situation I have created. Mr. Black, this man must be found and made to see that no one will believe, not even Scoville's widow—"

"There! you needn't go any further with that," admonished the lawyer. "Have you any idea who this person is?"

"Not the least in the world."

"I ask because of this," he explained, picking out another letter and smilingly holding it out toward her. She read it with flushed cheeks.

Listen to the lady. You can't listen to any one nicer. What she wants she can get. There's a witness you never saw or heard of.

A witness they had never heard of! What witness? Scarcely could she lift up her eyes from the paper. Yet there was a possibility, of course, that this statement was a lie.

"Stuff, isn't it?" muttered the lawyer. "Never mind, we'll soon have hold of the writer." His face had taken on a much more serious aspect, and she could no longer complain of his indifference or even of his sarcasm.

"You will give me another opportunity of talking with you on this matter," pursued he. "If you do not come here you may expect to see me at Judge Ostrander's. I do not quite like the position into which you have been thrown by these absurd insinuations. I may even lead to your losing the home which has been so fortunately opened for you. If this occurs you may count on my friendship, Mrs. Scoville. I may have failed you once, but I will not fail you twice."

Surprised, almost touched, she held out her hand, with a cordial "Thank you," in which emotion struggled with her desire to preserve an appearance of complete confidence in Judge Ostrander, and incidentally in his son. Then she turned to go.

The lawyer appeared to acquiesce in the movement of departure. But when he saw her about to vanish through the door some impulse of compunction, as real as it was surprising, led him to call her back and seat her once more in the chair she had so lately left.

"I cannot let you go," said he, "until you understand that these insinuations from a self-called witness would not be worth your attention if there were not a few facts to give color to his wild claims. Oliver Ostrander was in that ravine connecting with Dark Hollow, very near the time of the onslaught on Mr. Etheridge; and he certainly hated the man and wanted him out of the way. The whole town knows that, with one exception. You know that exception?"

"I think so," she acceded, taking a firm grip upon one of his hands. "That this was anything more than a coincidence has never been questioned. He was not even summoned as a witness. With the judge's high reputation in mind I do not think a single person could have been found in those days to suggest any possible connection between this boy and a crime so obviously premeditated. But people's minds change with time and events, and Oliver Ostrander's name uttered in this connection today would not occasion the same shock to the community as it would have done then. You understand me, Mrs. Scoville?"

"You allude to the unexpected separation between himself and father, and not to any failure on his part to sustain the reputation of his family?"

"Oh, he has made a good position for himself, and earned universal consideration. But that doesn't weigh against the prejudices of people, roused by such eccentricities as have distinguished the conduct of these two men."

"Alas!" she murmured, frightened to the soul for the first time, both by his manner and his words.

"You know and I know," he went on with a grimness possibly suggested by his subject, "that no mere whim lies back of such a preposterous seclusion as that of Judge Ostrander behind his double fence. Sons do not cut loose from fathers or fathers from sons without good cause. You can see, then, that the peculiarities of their mutual history form but a poor foundation for any light refutation of this scandal, should it reach the public mind. Judge Ostrander knows this, and you know that he knows this; hence your distress. Have I not read your mind, madam?"

"No one can read my mind any more than they can read Judge Ostrander's," she avowed in a last desperate attempt to preserve her secret. "You may think you have done so, but what assurance can you have of the fact?"

"You are strong in their defense," said he, "and you will need to be if the matter ever comes up. The shadows from Dark Hollow reach far, and engulf all they fall upon."

TO DARKEN HAIR APPLY SAGE TEA

Look Young! Bring Back Its Natural Color, Gloss and Thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, and a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray, dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the sage to get the ready-to-use tonic, cost-sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way, about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of fuss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not unful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

You insure your house against fire—why not insure it against decay with Don't Hide Them With a Veil; Remove Them With The Othine Prescription.

This prescription for the removal of freckles was written by a prominent physician and is usually so successful in removing freckles and giving a clear, beautiful complexion that it is sold by druggists under guarantee to refund the money if it fails.

Don't hide your freckles under a veil; get an ounce of othine and remove them. Even the first few applications should show a wonderful improvement, some of the lighter freckles vanishing entirely.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine; it is this that is sold on the money-back guarantee.

UP in Canada at the outbreak of the Great War, the Government found the farmers with a huge apple crop on their hands and the big export market closed against them.

"Increase home consumption" seemed to be the only answer to the question of how to market the surplus, but that appeared easier to say than to do. Through the Canadian Press Association the Government was induced to make a small appropriation for advertising.

The wholesomeness of apples and the many ways in which they might be cooked furnished material for the newspaper advertising copy. Canada marketed her apple crop at home—successfully and profitably. And it cost the Government about $12,000 spent in newspaper advertising to do it.

Julius Caesar

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The Hopewille Debatin' society was Squar' Joslyn's idea. It dawned on him one afternoon as he was hoein' in his garden, and that evenin' he came over to the drug store and made a speech and started the ball rollin'. A week later the society had its first meetin'. There was a hot time for about an hour. Of the forty men present five wanted to be president, but after awhile and by puttin' in two votes for himself the squar' was duly elected. Deacon Jackson was made referee, and the other offices was struggled after to an extent. There wasn't any debate at the first meeting, but Squar' Joslyn made a speech of acceptance which raised the price of butter in Hopewille 10 cents per pound. After saying that he wouldn't exchange places with the president of the United States he began with the year 750 B. C., and the way he come whirlin' along down to the year 1915 made the glass in the windows rattle. He excited the crowd as he hit Nero, brought applause as he touched Columbus, and when he got through with Washington there wasn't no holdin' Enos Williams, and Jonas Bebee and Aaron Bradshaw was in tears. After the speech was over Elder Harper figured up and declared that the squar' had made twenty-seven different pints in his oration.

The subject for debate at the next meetin' was "Does Honesty Pay?" The number on the affirmative and negative sides was almost even, and Ebenezer White was appointed to lead off and tell how honesty paid him. Each speaker was to be limited to ten minutes. Ebenezer had been thinkin' it over for three or four days, and when he got up he began with:

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar. When Caesar was a young man of twenty-two he hadn't a dollar to his name and no show to strike a job. He had about made up his mind to commit suicide when he found a five dollar gold piece in the road. His first thought was to use the money to start in business, but it was only a temptation. His honesty wouldn't permit such a thing. He went around inquiren' who had lost $5 and at length found the owner, and the owner took a likin' to him and pushed him along until he was finally made a king."

"That's one tally mark for the affirmative side," said the deacon as the speaker sat down, "and I decide that Ebenezer has made five pints. We will now hear from Jonas Bebee on the negative side."

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar," began Jonas as he rose up. "When Caesar was a young man of twenty-two he hadn't a dollar to his name," continued Jonas. "He had made up his mind to hang himself when he found a stray mawl in the woods. He sold the critter to the first man who would buy, and with the $12 he received he went into politics and pushed along until he finally became one of the greatest men of his time."

"That's a tally mark on the negative side," said the deacon, "and the pints seem to be even."

The deacon called upon Aaron Bradshaw, who was on the affirmative side.

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar," began Aaron, with a wave of his hand. He had it that Caesar was poor and out of a job and discouraged when he happened to find a diamond ring in a mudhole. He could have got an advance of $50 on it at a pawnbroker's, but he actually went hungry for three days while huntin' up the loser. Struck by such a display of unselfish honesty, the owner presented him with $75, took him under his wing and in time made him king.

"That's another tally for the affirmative," said the deacon, "and I guess I'll give Aaron the same number of pints as the rest."

"It's the turn of the negative," said the deacon as Aaron sat down, "and we'll now hear from Philetus Johnson."

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar," began Philetus as he rose up, and there was a row. It was full ten minutes before order was restored, and during that time everybody got his head punched at least once and his coat torn up the back. By and by Deacon Spooner said:

"It's a shame and a disgrace to this town of ours to carry on in this way. I notice that Jim Yates, who don't belong on either side, has jest come in. Jim, do you want to say anything?"

"Not very much," replied Jim as he looked around. "I'd simply like to ask if anybody here has lost this half dollar?"

He held up the coin in his fingers. There were forty-seven men in the room, and every single one of 'em, includin' the deacon and the squar', replied that it was his.

"As to a debatin' society, it may be a good thing," said Jim as a grin spread over his face, "but as to the subject of discussion tonight I guess you'd better drop it and let it stay dropped. This half dollar has bin in my pocket for two weeks, and every one of you was willin' to lie to git hold of it!"

Then he moved softly downstairs and went home, and after the rest of the crowd had sat and looked at each other for two or three minutes in an uncomfortable way the president put on his hat and said:

"Instead of follerin' anybody else back to the days of Julius Caesar, I guess we'd better foller Jim Yates downstairs and call the thing busted!"

PLANT FOOD SUPPLY

WAR DEMANDS A GREATER SUPPLY FROM THE AMERICAN PLANTER.

It is of the utmost importance that a soil should contain those elements found in the plant; hence, it is almost self-evident that a fertile soil must contain a maximum quantity of those particular elements or constituents which are removed from the soil in maximum amounts by the crops grown and by this constant removal, it brings the soil to a low point of fertility, which makes prolific cropping impossible.

The planter's future progress depends—How well he is going to restore fertility to the soil. In order to conserve the soil, you must maintain its fertility. In drawing together the raw material to create our brands, it is done with the idea to help the planter to build up soil fertility. The content of High Grade materials in our brands will build up your soil fertility with correct farming methods, and bring you quick returns for the money invested.

The influence of fertilizer is perhaps greater than any other factor in determining the profit that may be derived from the farm. Its influence is felt not only in the quantity of seed produced, but in the quality of the products derived from it. A specific fertilizer possesses certain capabilities, the value of which are dependent on selecting the Raw Materials to produce Pure Plant Food. By selecting is meant not only that the fertilizer should contain a sufficient amount of nutrient in the right proportions, but also that the materials furnishing the nutrient should be clean and free from any substance that may injure the growing plant or the quality of the product.

Farmers should realize when buying food for the plant that the value of the fertilizer depends on the material brought together to form the Plant Food.

Our Guarantees of analysis, and the constituent elements of the Fertilizers we offer can be implicitly relied upon. We use only the Best and Purest Materials at our factory. We invite comparison of our grades with other Brands. The verdict of the soil, the final and most important test, will sustain our claims. Give us a trial and save money.

Men, this Goes:

THE motorists who are getting the most out of their machines, summer and winter, are the fellows who regularly and consistently feed Atlantic Gasoline. Because Atlantic "Gas" has the gait and get-there spirit that puts pep and power behind a piston—that takes figures off your "gas" bill and puts them on your speedometer, where they belong.

Atlantic Gasoline has a uniform "boiling point" that assures every new lot of "gas" to be exactly like the last you put in. Your carburetor, once adjusted, stays put.

Atlantic "Gas" has a liveliness that begets easy starting on all kinds of days, and it has more mileage to the cubic inch than ordinary gasoline. It is made from the finest crude oil that flows—made to a definite standard by the oldest and largest refiners in the State. That's why the merry mob of motorists ask for "Atlantic Gasoline," by name, instead of trusting to luck with "Give me five gallons of gas."

All good garages sell Atlantic Gasoline, and Atlantic trucks and tankers deliver any quantity, anywhere, any time.

Atlantic POLARINE is the 100-percent lubricant that flows freely at all temperatures. It keeps upkeep DOWN.
